

A PERSONAL APPEAL TO YOU
FROM PROSPECTIVE LABOUR
PARLIAMENTARY CANDIDATE

PAUL JOHN CLARK

Dear Labour supporter,

As you will know, we are heading towards the General Election campaign of 2015. It is an Election that we really must win.

*Not just for ourselves, but for those in greater need. For NHS patients who are being rationed or denied vital treatments, and for our youngsters and students who need schools properly funded. For our chronically sick and ill, who are being deprived basic help and our elderly, who deserve better care and services. For our hard-working mums and dads, daily struggling to pay their bills. For our nurses, overworked, underpaid and under resourced. And for working people denied the opportunities to succeed and to get on.

I am writing to you as a prospective Parliamentary candidate and a life-long Labour supporter, having worked for the past 25 years in the Civil and Public Service, at the Department of Trade, Health, NHS and the Met police and have been a Trade Union and Health and Safety rep. I want to represent this area, to help local people access the services and opportunities that we all deserve, and to help create a better country, where fairness comes first and every child has a fair chance in life. I want our elderly to be safe in their homes and our sick to know the NHS will always be there, free at point of use and properly funded, to care for us.

I attended a Comprehensive school, and am proud of my working class, east London upbringing. I obtained my Degree at UEL, a Polytechnic turned University and remained continuously employed in many different civil and public service roles. I set up and ran my own small business. I have been married for 15 years. I am compassionate and understand the real problems families face. I am not a "career politician" like many other candidates, I am a working person and voter, just like you.

I have stood as a candidate for Labour previously. I believe that I have the professional skills and abilities to campaign and win this seat and to serve as your Labour MP, representing the people of Holborn and St. Pancras.

Please support me to become your Labour Party candidate by nominating and by voting for me.

Yours faithfully,

Paul John Clark
